Workers want nursery to stay

TERRACE — A group of Thornhill tree nursery employees have started a campaign to keep it open.

Decreasing demand and falling prices caused nursery owner Pacific Regeneration Technologies to announce last year it was phasing the operation out by 1994.

But nursery employee Nancy Holubowski says the closure will eliminate a large payroll.

"We estimate the loss of $600,000 in gross payroll to the community," she said last week. "The UI rate will go up and there will be people on welfare."

Holubowski and the others are writing federal and provincial politicians as part of their efforts.

Those on the list include federal Skeena MP Jim Fulton, provincial Skeena MLA Helmut Giesbrecht, forests minister Dan Miller and premier Mike Harcourt.

Holubowski said the presence of a tree nursery to the area is important because of the large role the forest industry plays here.

"Basically, if we pull out or cut down trees, then we should plant with trees from a nursery in the area," she said.

The group hopes to persuade northwest forestry companies to take out more seedling contracts with the nursery.

"We could sit back and do nothing, but at least you can try," said Holubowski.

The nursery employs five full time people and offers seasonal employment to many others.

Pacific Regeneration was formed by ex-provincial forest service employees in 1988 when the provincial government announced sold a large number of its nurseries as part of a privatization program.

Some of the drop in demand comes from a finishing of a province-wide effort to replant areas that had been left dormant after being logged.

Pacific Regeneration was also caught up in a change in provincial government policy concerning responsibility for replanting.

That policy makes the province responsible for replanting areas cut before 1987 and companies responsible for areas they cut after 1987.

The companies, in an effort to save money, are now relying as much as possible on natural regeneration of logged areas before buying seedlings.

That means they replant to what is needed to fill gaps not covered by natural regeneration, reducing the number of seedlings they have to buy.

Logging practices have also changed in the past few years, leaning toward smaller cutblocks and away from large clear cuts. This further reduces the seedling demand.

Pacific Regeneration will keep its consulting office here open and will continue to operate its cold storage facility.

Haircut will help aircraft landings

TERRACE — Transport Canada wants to give Punk Rock a haircut.

More commonly known as Little Herman, the hill sits smack dab in the middle of the landing path leading into the Terrace-Kitimat airport from the south.

It's been a constant source of irritation to pilots and passengers, drawing the blame for a lot of missed landings.

That's because pilots must be able to see the runway from a certain distance away before committing themselves to a landing.

If pilots cannot see the runway, they pull up and chances are the aircraft heads off to another airport.

Temperamental weather compounds the problem of visibility, says Terrace-Kitimat airport manager Darryl Laurent.

But now Transport Canada thinks there is a way to ease that frustration just a little bit, he said.

A transport official looking at the approach asked one day if it was possible to take the trees off the top of Punk Rock/Little Herman.

"We call it Punk Rock because when you're looking at it, it looks like a head with one of those punk haircuts," said Laurent.

He estimates the trees are more than 60 feet high.

By removing them, pilots will have an added advantage in making visual contact with the runway.

"It may not sound like a lot but we have one approach now at 500 feet," said Laurent.

"If we can do anything to make it better, we will," he said.

Transport Canada has contacted the forest service and the regional district to see what they think of the idea.

It's a thriller

Teachers give strike vote nod

TERRACE — Teachers here have voted to give their union leaders the power to call a strike vote at any time.

The strike authorization vote passed last week with 89 per cent of teachers in favour.

Contract talks between the Terrace District Teachers Union and the school board continue, but the two sides remain far apart.

The teachers have cut their wage demand down to four per cent in each of two years.

The board has offered 1.5 per cent in each year of the contract.

Union president Cathy Lambright said teachers are angry about changes the board is seeing on the mainstreaming of special needs children. She said the board would be able to put unlimited numbers of special needs children in regular classes.

"With the current language the board has on the table there is no way the teachers will sign a contract," Lambright vowed.

The union seeks restrictions that would limit classes to two handicapped students, and only one of them could be severely physically handicapped or moderately mentally handicapped.

"It's extremely important that we have this protection not only for teachers but for students as well," she added. "If you have a Down Syndrome child coming into your class, most teachers are not trained to deal with that."

In such situations, she said, the handicapped child doesn't get proper instruction and the other students don't get sufficient attention.

"Teachers would be absolutely overwhelmed if some of these things got in," Lambright added. Bargaining resumes Feb. 10-11.

City ranks second in housing starts

TERRACE — Figures released by the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC) show Prince George was the only urban centre in northern B.C. to record more housing starts than Terrace in 1992.

Terrace's final tally was 111 starts compared to Prince George's 460.

That 111 new homes is more than the combined figure for Quesnel, Williams Lake, Dawson Creek, Fort St. John, Kitimat and Prince Rupert.

It's also five more than the city's previous best year, 1990.

Terrace has averaged 80 housing starts over the past four years compared to 21 in Prince Rupert and just 10 in Kitimat.

Across the north, a total of 690 new homes were started in 1992, one third more than the previous year.

CMHC market analyst David Hobden attributed the jump to the people moving to the north and to low interest rates.

Queensway sewer system cost drops

TERRACE — A sewer system for Queensway got a lot cheaper and simpler last week.

The low-pressure gravity-fed system now comes in at $2.125 million.

It will likely cost homeowners around $500 a year for 20 years — possibly as little as $400 a year if the Kiselas band's Kulspai subdivision joins the system.

Thornhill regional district director Les Watmough said a committee of residents, working with engineers, found ways to cut costs down to what they consider to be a reasonable price.

They managed to carve

$150,000 off the repaving costs, he noted.

"The committee is happy with this," he said. "We believe this can be sold."

Queensway voters will be asked in a referendum this spring whether or not they will agree to pay for the new system.

Victoria has agreed to subsidize the sewer system to an extraordinary extent — 75 per cent — in a bid to make it more affordable for residents.

The need for a system for the area remains pressing.

Health officers posted warning signs along Bobsien Crescent last year because of raw sewage from failed septic systems that surfaces in ditches there.

The sewage problem has also put the regional district on the province's list of polluted sites. And homeowners complain their property values have plummeted as a result.

Earlier proposals included a plan to put in an oversized main sewer line that would be able to handle future expansion of the system to other parts of Thornhill.

That plan has been axed. The so-called "oversized" option — which would have required the approval of Thornhill voters as well — was rejected by the ministry of municipal affairs.

Although the plan would have saved Thornhill thousands of dollars in years ahead, Victoria was unwilling to subsidize the oversized line at the same rate it has agreed to subsidize the more urgent Queensway system.

Now only Queensway voters will be going to referendum.

The annual costs consist of capital costs of $350 a year and operating and maintenance costs of about $150 per year.

On top of the $500 yearly payment, homeowners would have to pay a one-time installation fee of around $1,350 to install an approved septic tank and connect it to the service line.

Residents could save thousands of dollars in interest payments by making one $2,800 lumpsum payment up front. That, plus the installation fee, would put the one-time up front cost at around $4,100.

If enough homeowners opted to pay up front, the cost of the entire system might also come down further, Watmough said.

If approved, all residents will be required to hook up to the new system — even if they voted against it.

"For this thing to be successful we have to compel by bylaw that everybody hook up within a reasonable amount of time," said regional district administrator Bob Marcellin.

The Bobsein Queensway Sewer Committee plans an open house meeting Feb. 18 to discuss the project. Time and place are to be announced.

Regional district directors hope to decide on a date for the referendum sometime later this month.

Health boss Cull to hear pitch for local CT scan TERRACE — Terrace Regional Health Care Society officials are off to Victoria Feb. 15 to formally present their case for a CT scan machine to health minister Elizabeth Cull.

They'll be bolstered by more than $600,000 raised by the Dr. R.E.M. Lee Hospital Foundation to buy one.

The foundation set a goal of $600,000 when it began raising money three years ago.

The foundation went over the top last week to $610,000 when the Nisga'a Tribal Council presented foundation representatives with a $20,000 cheque in New Aiyansh.

But the society still needs to convince the ministry to put up the money for renovations to house the machine and money to operate it.

A CT scan machine is a prized diagnostic tool, offering a three-dimensional image superior to that generated by standard x-rays.

"We've looked at a wide range of scanners. We're in the $600,000 range and that's the goal we set out to raise from the start," said health care society chief executive officer Michael Leisinger last week.

He said operating costs are pegged at $300,000 a year for a full time operation and $230,000 for three days a week.

Renovation cost at the hospital for the machine is estimated at $140,000 but that includes redoing an x-ray room at the hospital.

The operating cost breaks down to $70,000 in wages for a full time technician and part time clerk, $50,000 for x-ray tubes and the majority of the remainder for a maintenance contract.

Fees for a radiologist using the CT scan would be covered by the payments from the provincial Medical Services Plan.

Leisinger said the society estimates between 1,200 and 2,500 users a year.

"One of the unknowns is the demand so we want to start part time until we get a handle on it," he said.

Leisinger acknowledged that convincing the provincial government will be difficult.

It'll be adding up not only the renovation and operating costs but also radiology fees because it finances the medical services plan.

The campaign for a CT scan machine began three years ago by the Lee foundation.

It's been greatly assisted by a multitude of community groups and by individual donations.

Cash calendars, sold by the Elks club, have provided a steady source of income.

The prospect of a CT scan machine in Terrace brightened last year when Prince Rupert hospital switched to supporting rather than opposing.

That came after a review of northwest health care services said there should be a CT machine in Terrace.

Foundation spokesman Helene McRae said the Nisga'a donation was gratefully appreciated.

The donation had been discussed for several months and a decision reached Jan. 27, tribal council secretary-treasurer Ed Wright said last week.

"We decided it was time to make a donation on behalf of the Nisga'a nation," he said.

Hospitals meet to discuss better ways of operating

TERRACE — Northwest hospitals continue the idea of sharing services and reducing costs with a Feb. 6 meeting in Kitimat.

Eight hospitals will be there, as will Skeena Health Unit chief medical officer Dr. David Bowering and Dr. Peter Newbery. Newbery has been hired by the provincial government to work on regional co-ordination of services.

The meeting is the latest in a series called by the hospitals to make improvements to northwest health care.

The idea gained momentum last year when an examination of Terrace, Kitimat and Prince Rupert hospitals and health care services was released.

It said money could be saved and services increased if there is more co-ordination and co-operation between the three cities.

"We're looking forward to hearing from Peter," said Terrace Regional Health Care Society chief executive officer Michael Leisinger.

Newbery said he was happy that hospitals were already talking about sharing services and working together.

"I'm also looking forward to more work on building links between hospitals and the communities," he said.

"There are measures from that to discharge patients a bit earlier," Newbery added.

Newbery works out of Hazelton's Wrinch Memorial Hospital. He's the director of United Church Health Services with responsibility for doctors and medical staff in the Hazeltons, Bella Colla and Bella Bella.

He was named provincial co-ordinator, a position recommended in the health care study, in early January.

Newbery has taken the job until the spring, or until a permanent one is hired.

City tightens up lot sales

TERRACE — City-owned lots on Maroney Ave. are going back on the market, but buyers will face nine conditions laying out what can and cannot be built there.

Council last week agreed to impose a "building scheme" on the six properties. And, if the owners agree, the same conditions will apply to five other lots already sold by the city but as yet undeveloped.

The restrictions follow neighbourhood protests at the appearance of a modular home on one of the new Birch bench street's lots.

Maroney Ave. resident Ray Tank charged council was guilty of "a very serious oversight" when it failed to put a restrictive covenant on properties it sold on that street.

Presenting a 31 signature petition of protest to council, he said the presence of a modular home brought down the value of neighbouring homes.

The six unsold lots were withdrawn from the market Dec. 19, when the city became aware of the protests.

The new restrictions now outlaw manufactured (mobile), modular or pre-built homes as well as any building "having previously been occupied or used on any other parcel of land."

A second condition requires the ground floor area of any new MODULAR HOME on Maroney Ave. up on the bench isn't like the kind that comes to mind to most people when describing a manufactured house. Protests by neighbours have caused council to bring in restrictions on the kind of home that can be built on home on Maroney must be at least 1,200 sq.ft.

Based on last year's average house construction cost of close to $76 per sq.ft., that effectively means it will cost at least $90,000 to build a new house on Maroney. Throw in the cost of the lot and the average home will run about $120,000.

The exterior of any new house must be finished within 12 months of the construction starting date and any attached out-building must be painted.

Also banned, both on the subdivision's street and properties, is the parking of vehicles or heavy equipment with a gross vehicle weight of more than four tonnes.

lots being sold on the avenue by the city. This home will cost $145,000 by the time landscaping is put in and appliances installed.

And the restrictions even cover pets, allowing only cats and dogs "or other animals actually housed within their owner's dwelling unit."

Blacklisted are horses, cows, sheep, mules, goats, pigs, bees, poultry, fur-bearing animals (even rabbits) and domesticated wild animals of any kind.

Mayor Jack Talstra said the building scheme conditions would "guarantee housing of the kind the neighbourhood would like to see, ... a neighbourhood that they enjoy and like to live in."

Administrator Bob Hallor pointed out such restrictive agreements are not uncommon on new sub-divisions.

Modular home interest on the rise

TERRACE — The man at the centre of the Maroney Ave. modular home controversy bears no ill will toward protesting neighbours.

"If anything, it's been good publicity," Dwight Mooney said of city moves to prevent any more such homes being located on the street.

Local agent for the manufacturer of the homes, Mooney said news of the outcry prompted a number of people to go look at the home.

He's even had a couple of enquiries about purchasing one of the pre-built units.

As for the protests, Mooney said the problem appeared to be people seeing a building coming down the street in two pieces on the back of a truck and immediately thinking "trailer".

But this type of home can't be compared to a trailer/mobile home, said Mooney.

The 1508 sq.ft ground floor sits on a full basement and the joisting between is exactly the same as that found in a conventional "stick house".

And the low pitch of the roof (it has a 1-in-12 slope) meant the walls had to be "beefed up" to take local snow loads, said Mooney.

He suggested, the home is structurally as strong, if not stronger, than some conventional houses.

As for complaints about the appearance of the roof, Mooney pointed out there were three houses nearby which had exactly the same pitch.

Nor is this a cheap form of housing.

The 3,000 sq.ft. of living area includes three bedrooms, two bathrooms, a jacuzzi, fireplace, and dining room as well as family room. There's also an attached two car garage.

When spring arrives, Mooney said the lot will also be fully landscaped and a 20ft. x 12ft. deck added on to the back.

The eventual buyer will also find the house comes equipped with six appliances and drapes, Mooney added.

"This is the top end, deluxe model," he emphasized, suggesting the final price, including the lot, would be approximately $145,000.

"They are going to be people who like the look of the home and there's going to be people who don't," Mooney concluded. "That's human nature."

In brief

Trade banned

THE PROVINCIAL government has banned the trade of certain bear parts to protect black and grizzly bears from poachers.

New regulations went into effect Feb. 1 banning commercial transactions in bear galls, paws and genitalia separated from the carcass or hide.

Good flights

ALL THAT clear weather in late December and on into January may have been nippy but there were some benefits.

One of those was a dramatic reduction in cancelled flights at the airport during winter months.

"From Dec. 1 to Jan. 18 I'd say we had eight missed flights," says Terrace airport manager Darryl Laurent. The usual number of missed flights during that period averages 30, he added.

Tower drain

A DRAINED water tower at the Gilaus subdivision east of town could have been serious if the Thornhill Volunteer Fire Department hadn't been prepared.

A valve froze and split during the cold weather. When it thawed the water from the tower ran out, leaving homes and the subdivision's hydrant system dry.

But a phone call alerted the Thornhill Volunteer Fire Department to the circumstance and it was ready to respond with a truck carrying 6,800 gallons of water if there had been a fire.

"The subdivision's in our fire protection area and we rely on the hydrant system for our water," said Thornhill fire chief Art Hoving.

"We keep 6,800 gallons of water in the hall at all times. It's part of our standard operating procedure. Not all of Thornhill has hydrants," he explained.

The water tower valve was soon repaired.

RRSP NOTES

RRSPs can help ensure you have a comfortable future

Certainly, it seems that Canadians need some encouragement to save for their future. In fact, a recent Gallup survey indicated that only 45% of those surveyed were enrolled in any kind of pension plan whether through their employer or through an independent savings program like an RRSP. Not surprisingly, the survey concluded that many Canadians are ill-prepared for retirement; some may even find it financially difficult to retire.

The outlook doesn't need to be so bleak, however. By opening a registered retirement savings plan, you could help to make your retirement years significantly more financially secure.

Making the difference with an RRSP

Saving through an RRSP can give you added security at retirement. And contributing to an RRSP can have the added benefit of helping you save money today by providing you with a tax deduction. Not only that, any interest on your RRSP is sheltered from taxes as long as it stays in your RRSP.

So, if you haven't started an RRSP already, visit your nearest financial institution. It's never too late to start thinking about your future!

WELCOME BACK FRANK!

Who is Frank?

Feb. 3, 1993...We all thought we had seen the last of Frank Stanley! He graduated from Caledonia, married his high school sweetheart Betty and settled down in Terrace. He worked as a carpenter, building many homes here in town, and started a family. Just as the kids were all in school, and Betty found herself a part time job at a local doctor's office, they moved away. But, things weren't any greener down south, and Terrace was calling the Stanley family to return...so...Frank and Betty are back in Terrace, and boy, have the kids grown!! Lindsay is 12, Emma is 10, and little David is 5. They have all settled into school, and met their old friends. Frank is busy building houses, and Betty is looking for a part time job.

We almost didn't recognize Frank...he has a great new pair of glasses, but we noticed that fancy old car of his. It must be close to an antique by now.

A healthy shift

Next week's meeting in Kitimat of area hospitals will be interesting for more than one reason. They are gathering to talk about better sharing, co-ordination and co-operation of northwest health care services. With them will be the provincial government's new regional health care co-ordinator and the head of the Skeena Health Unit.

The idea behind the meeting and that of several major studies of northwest health care is find efficiencies within the system. It's clear there won't be a lot of new health care money in this decade. Instead, more will have to be done with less.

And now, after yesterday's announcement from health minister Elizabeth Cull, all health care services will be subject to a new governing structure. In other words, a merging of health care operations will be accompanied by a merging of health care decision making.

The theory behind the two moves is that health care is not simply an isolated hospital or an stand alone extended care facility or a community health care program. Health care is seamless, to use a popular bureaucratic term. One aspect influences another.

The trick behind all of this is the power and authority granted to health care providers. A common complaint in the north is that the money and ultimate decision making rests down south, no matter how much those people in the south state otherwise.

That's why the provincial government must commit itself to virtually destroying the health ministry as we now know it. If it wants to shift responsibility for health care to the regions, it must give the new governing bodies sufficient resources to accomplish the task.

Should the provincial government establish new regional governing bodies but retain its health bureaucracy, it will only add another layer to a system already burdened with too many paper pushers. This kind of thing takes what is known as political courage. Civil service unions won't like it, nor will those comfortably holed up in Victoria.

But the people of the province may like it for it will bring health care authority to those that use it. In the end, that's all that counts.

Leave this river in natural state

VICTORIA - In the most remote corner of northwestern British Columbia, the awesome Tatshenshini River is on the threshold of destruction.

Geddes Resources Ltd. of Tronto wants to build a copper mine of massive proportions at Windy Craggy Mountain. The company plans to open the area to commercial exploitation by building a 100-kilometre road to the huge mineral deposit.

The mine is expected to create 500 jobs for 20 years. That's when the copper deposit will have run out.

A small city, roads and a slurry pipeline would be built in the wilderness. Waste rock would be dumped on nearby glaciers or buried in a lake created by a dam.

Stephen Owen, the province's Commissioner on Resources and Environment, has recommended that before making a final decision, the B.C. government call for a six-month period of public consultation to deal with a number of issues he raised in an interim report about the proposed mine.

a mining expert, playing down the environmental concerns, recently referred to the project as "just another mine in the middle of nowhere, for Pete's sake." A friend and fellow journalist has a somewhat different view.

Most of us will never see the pristine, onlely and awe-some beauty of the Tatshenshini. Nor will we ever trek through the Amazon rain forest. But that doesn't make them any less worthy of protection.

Mark Hume has rafted the Tatshenshini and devoted a chapter about the river in his book The Run of the River, published last year by New Star Books of Vancouver. Here is Mark's account as he and a small party of wild water rafters approach the confluence of the Tat and Alsek Rivers.

From the Capital

by Hubert Beyer

"Roaring out of a broad, glaciated valley, it joins with the Tatshenshini to produce a river as wide as the Fraser, six times the volume of the Colorado.

"At one time there are 24 glaciers visible. Their tongues are dirty and cracked; there are pillars and spirals of snow; blue ice shines in the crevasses; when you get up on them, you can hear the ice moan and crack and ring.

"There is no adequate way to describe the scenery. Surrounding the river are jagged mountains where glaciers are moving. At your feet, tufts of Arctic cotton, bear tracks and just there, a few feet from shore, the dark dorsal fins of a school of Coho salmon."

"The mountains are layered with color. It is mid-September and fall is sweeping across the north. Along the valley floor are lush green cottonwoods, marbled with bright yellow willow thickets; above are great swatches of red fireweed and then bands of amber moss - finally the fresh snow, steeped and smooth.

Looking across this scenery, where a $30 million road will cut across the mountain flanks if Geddes goes ahead, you have to wonder: how important is it that the world has another copper mine?"

How important, indeed? Owen's report gives us some insight into the importance of the area as a wildlife habitat.

The Tatshenshini-Alsek area, Owen says, is one of the last strongholds of a thriving grizzly population in North America. It also provides habitat for the blue or glacier bear, found nowhere else in Canada.

About half of the estimated 400 Dall's sheep in British Columbia, he says, have their summer and winter range in the area. Other species depending on the area for their habitat include about 300 mountain goats, 180 species of birds, and a huge annual salmon run.

Spawning grounds in the Tatshenshini watershed contribute 95 per cent of the chinook salmon, 90 per cent of the sock-eye salmon, and 75 per cent of the Coho salmon to the commercial fishery in Alaska at the mouth of the Alsek River.

On the other hand, the potential economic gains should not be ignored. The mine would provide 500 jobs for 20 years, and gross metal value of the ore at Windy Craggy is estimated to be at least $15 billion with a recovery value of about $8.5 billion.

During the lifetime of the mine, Ottawa would collect an estimated $550 million in taxes, and the province about $720 million, including corporate and personal income taxes, mining, fuel and sales taxes.

But the question is this: are 500 jobs and $36 million a year for 20 years worth the unavoidable violation and corruption of something as awesomely beautiful and irreplaceable as the unsullied wilderness of the Tatshenshini? I think not.

It's just pennies

Former Skeena MLA Dave Parker says Premier Mike Harcourt's five per cent wage cut and freeze on MLA salaries is horsefeathers.

An MLA makes $32,000 a year and gets a $16,000 tax-free expense allowance. There is also a per diem while the legislature is in session. This is good money compared to what a lot of B.C. workers make. Yet it doesn't recognize the complete expense of being an MLA, says Mr. Parker. Freezing their pay is punishment.

MLAs maintain two residences, one in the riding and one in Victoria. There are numerous out-of-pocket expenses for which there is no compensation. Work days of 14 hours are common.

A more meaningful gesture, one that would have meant something, would have been to hold salaries of civil servants, said Mr. Parker. It's a point well taken. The wage cut and freeze amounts to pennies. Wage increases to provincial civil servants amount to hundreds of millions of dollars.

Lots of objections

"It is circumstance and proper timing that give an action its character and make it either good or bad." Agesilaus

If city council had placed building restrictions on the Maroney Avenue subdivision lots before putting them up for sale, I would have been unaware of their proper timing. But for council to withdraw the remaining five or six lots from sale until they write restrictions to keep out other modular homes is a blunder, a major, offensive blunder that makes me squirm.

It makes me squirm like listening to white South Africans long for a return of apartheid, or Jacques Perizeau say Quebec doesn't need the support of Anglophones to gain sovereignty.

Such snobbery.

Research into the early years of the average subdivision petitioner would probably disclose a leaner lifestyle than the circumstances that now permit him to buy a lot overlooking common folk. Few of us are born rich. If we are fortunate to rise from frugal living to an expensive lifestyle it's usually the result of years - many years - of hard work, careful spending, and an inheritance.

Anyone who looks down his nose at a neighbour's modular home and feigns concern for a perceived property devaluation is probably denying an acute attack of cupidity.

Suppose the audacious presence of a modular home has whittled the value of Maroney Avenue homes? Shouldn't

Through Bifocals

by Claudette Sandeckl

neighbours welcome lower property values if it means years of lower taxes? I can understand real estate salespersons and Glen Clark lamenting the reduction of revenue, but not owners - unless they intend flipping their lots.

The distinction between "modular" and "mobile" homes isn't clear to me. Subdivision petitioners seem to lump the two together. So why the fuss about modular homes? Unless they're ancient, dripping rust, sagging from long hauls, flapping loose metal panels, and tarred from joey shack connections, they're no more of an eyesore than detached dwellings designed to satisfy eccentric tastes.

Modular homes make good neighbours. They don't bark all night ... or day. They don't play music so loud sound waves crumble concrete. They don't drive in and out at all hours slamming car doors and hooting like drunks. They don't park their overflow in your driveway. They don't hide thieves, vandals, or arsonists. Nor do they block anyone's view. Since they flooded the housing market in the 1950's, mobile homes have eased many a housing shortage for boom mining towns to accommodations for transient pipeline workers. They're often a first, affordable home for young couples, particularly if they're not sure how long they might live in one location. Eventually, most mobile homeowners build or buy a conventional house. That's when they sign petitions to outlaw modular dwellings in subdivisions.

Terrace with its near-zero rental rate and homeless people sheltered in makeshift quarters at public expense needs another subdivision of pseudo Donald Trumps as much as Queensway needs another septic field.

Happy birthday to Cassiar

TERRACE — There's nobody left in Cassiar to mark the first anniversary of its mine closing down.

The asbestos mine was the town's major employer. So when it shut down last Feb. 4 after the provincial government turned down a loan request, the people began to leave.

By the end of October last year, the last of the 1,100 residents had gone.

Today, a caretaker couple lives nearby and eight men work out of a highways maintenance yard on the outskirts.

Large buildings and homes — the ones that weren't moved out after a massive auction there last fall — sit empty and boarded up.

"It looks like a bomb hit it. Worse than a bomb," says one of the highways workers.

"When people began pulling houses out, anything they didn't want, they discarded. It's a mess," said Wayne Huber of Yellowhead Road and Bridge, the company that has the contract to take care of Hwy37 to the north and south of Cassiar.

The caretaker couple lives in a house next to Yellowhead's maintenance shop but the Yellowhead workers live in cabins out of town. Their families live elsewhere.

The workers don't get any radio stations, have no television and groceries are a two-hour drive south to Dease Lake or a similar length journey north to Watson

Lake in the Yukon.

Cassiar also served as the service centre for the natives who live north on Hwy37 at Good Hope Lake.

Its closure left Good Hope Lake without close medical attention and police among other services.

A helipad was put in last fall for emergency medical evacuations to Watson Lake, there are now regular visits by doctors and they now have an ambulance, says band economic development officer Steven Jakesta.

He's hoping Yellowhead Road and Bridge moves its maintenance shop to Good Hope Lake next year.

The one piece of good news for Good Hope Lake comes from its recognition last month as an official band with its own land base.

"Before they (the governments) considered us squatters. Now we can develop our own infrastructure and get more services," said Jakesta.

Ex-residents coping with new lives

TERRACE — Valdemar Isidoro was driving a truck, hauling snow in Cassiar Feb. 4, 1991 when he heard the news on the radio.

Provincial finance minister Glen Clark had turned down a loan request from Cassiar Mining Corporation.

The rumours had been floating around Cassiar, an asbestos mining town near the Yukon border, for months before.

In debt and losing money because of an expensive conversion from an open pit to an underground operation, the company needed the loan from the provincial government.

Refusal put the mine into receivership, ending its 40-year life and that of the town of 1,100 people.

"Up until then I didn't think it would happen. That day it became a reality," said Isidoro last week while sitting in the living room of his new home in Terrace.

A number of ex-Cassiar residents are living in Terrace. Others are scattered along Hwy16, in Smithers, Topley Landing, up in Granisle and in Prince George.

"During coffee break, in the coffee shop, nobody could believe it," he said.

The next day provincial government officials began to fly up in an attempt to explain their actions and to outline what would happen next.

Isidoro and the others heard of the severance pay package, the offer to pay moving expenses and the buy backs of their homes.

A year later, Isidoro says he had no idea his wife Zelia and children Mariana and Pedro would find themselves living in Terrace.

And they are not alone. A large number of ex-Cassiar residents are living in this area. Others are scattered along Hwy16 in Smithers, Topley, up in Granisle and in Prince George.

One of Isidoro's neighbours is from Cassiar and he sees others around town.

Isidoro said he hasn't heard of any of the ex-mine workers getting jobs here.

In addition to severance pay, relocation and home buy backs, the ex-employees were refunded the income taxes they paid on the amounts. They are also collecting unemployment insurance.

Isidoro is a heavy duty equipment operator but has been finishing off the basement of his home until spring comes.

Leaving Cassiar for Terrace has been an adjustment, he says, yet there are the benefits of more shopping and the weather. "People here complain about the weather, all the snow they are getting. To us, there's no snow," Isidoro said.

Looking back, Isidoro said the treatment Cassiar residents received after the closure could have been much worse.

"Nobody's every happy or pleased. There was the equity buy back (of homes) and they did pay for improvements but if you had a garage and fence, unless you had a receipt, you weren't paid," he said.

"In general, it hasn't been bad. They could have said we're locking up and that's it," he added.

Isidoro also bought the Catholic church in Cassiar during a massive auction of the townsite and mining equipment last fall and has had people interested in some of its fixtures.

Down in Langley, Tony and Lee Coran are settling in at a home they bought some years before.

"We left Oct. 31 when the lights were turned off. Tony turned off the lights at 7:30 p.m.," said Lee who lived in Cas-

BELL FROM Catholic church in Cassiar is one of the few mementos ex-resident Valdemar Isidoro has in his new Terrace home. Children Pedro and Mariana celebrated their first communion in the church. Other ex-Cassiar families now call Terrace home after the asbestos mine there closed a year ago. Smithers, Topley Landing, Granisle and Prince George also have their Cassiar contingents.

siar for 26 years.

She was responsible for organizing the relocation packages and is just now winding up that work.

"We're getting on with it, but I'm still wondering why it happened. I still have a real problem with that," said Coran.

The closure of the mine has caused problems for some families and has resulted in some break ups, she said.

"We'll never know how it's affected everybody," Coran added.

Linda and Jim McGill are now living in Princeton where Jim works for Simlico, a subsidiary of Princeton Mining Corporation which owned the Cassiar mine.

"It's been a real hard adjustment for the family. Some are coping better than others," she said.

"It's a whole different ballgame when you are forced out of some place compared to leaving when you make your own decision," McGill added.

McGill was one of those who fought to keep the town and the mine together last summer.

"I'm very, very resentful and upset," said McGill, adding she can't see the sense in spending millions of dollars in tax money to move out and support people when there is still ore in the ground.

McGill still hopes a mine might some day open up again in Cassiar but says the provincial government backed itself into a corner when it sold the assets of Cassiar Mining Corporation last year.

She attended a Cassiar Christmas party in Prince George last December and said people there wished they would have stayed and fought the provincial decision to close the town.

Final Cassiar price tag inches close to the $50 million mark

TERRACE — One year after the Cassiar asbestos mine closed, the provincial government is still adding up the cost to the taxpayer.

Yet there is general agreement that the final price tag could touch $50 million.

Still unknown is what the province will get back once all the assets of the Cassiar Mining Corporation are sold.

But finance official Steve Howlett admits that amount won't come close to easing the final overall cost.

"There's no question we're going to take a bit hit. Just the loan and the loan guarantee is a big amount," he said last week.

The loan was for $20 million and issued in 1988 to help pay for the cost of converting from an open pit to an underground mining operation.

The province further guaranteed a $5 million Bank of Montreal loan to the corporation.

Cassiar Mining Corporation was never able to repay the $20 million so the province lost that and $6 million in interest.

Howlett estimates the province has spent $11 million on severance packages to ex-mine workers, equity buy backs of their homes and relocation expenses.

It also spent $1.7 million in keeping the town running after it went into receivership.

Last month, the province and federal government repaid nearly $5 million in income taxes deducted from the severance, buy back and relocation pay outs.

And, finally, the province will pay for reclamation of the town site and huge slag heap on its outskirts. That could cost $5 million.

A massive auction held last fall took in approximately $6 million but the province is just one of many secured and unsecured creditors.

Cassiar Mining Corporation's North Vancouver dock is also for sale but it must first be investigated for possible environmental problems and that might reduce the net result, said Howlett.

Linda McGill, a former Cassiar resident who sat on a committee to keep the town and mine in one piece, says she's appalled the price tag.

"The province kept saying it's not a viable mine. I think they could have mothballed the whole thing for at least a year and given another company a chance to put something together," said McGill.

"There's $2 billion worth of ore there and it has to be worth something to somebody," she said.

McGill said she has tried but has been so far unsuccessful in getting a copy of a report the province used to reach a decision not to loan the Cassiar mine more money last year to keep it open.

Hunting appalls wildlife group

Dear Sir:

We of the B.C. Wildlife Federation find ourselves appalled at the disrespect shown by some of our Indians for the wildlife resources of this province.

The results are disastrous! The elk slaughter on Vancouver Island, the Elk kill in the Kootenays, deer in the Okanagan, moose in Prince George, as well as moose and deer in our Skeena region.

We hear that the buffalo hunt is in jeopardy for 1993, mainly because of illegal poaching. Reports indicate that as of December 16, 1992 the resident harvest was 30 animals, non-resident harvest was eight animals, while the illegal harvest was 150 plus animals. Sixty per cent of this harvest was cows.

The Indians from Fort St. John area and Pink Mountain where the buffalo are were not the biggest offenders. Most of this illegal harvest were from Indians outside of the area as far away as the Lower Mainland and Alberta.

Our conservation officers are at a loss to lay charges because of the so-called Sparrow decision which, by the way, is a directive for all of us regardless of race, colour or creed. We are called upon as a people to obey all "laws-of-the-land."

The B.C. Wildlife Federation understands that Canada is a sovereign nation composed of a multitude of persons of various religions, ethnic, cultural, racial, linguistic and national origins. We, as Canadians, are a single people.

One nation as so stated in the Canadian constitution. The Magna Carta is a founding document. It protects society in general and individuals from general oppression.

We of the federation believe in the Magna Carta and collectively we hold the following to be true:

1. The laws of Canada apply equally to all citizens.

2. The law sees no gender, colour, age, race in its application. The equality of opportunity is just that. There is not a policy to favour any one particular group.

3. We see parliament's duty as making laws and the courts duty to interpret same. "Honour of the Crown" with its precepts and principles does apply to all of us.

We must demand that the province change its policy and enforce the laws regarding our wildlife resource. We also believe that the leaders in the Indian community are also appalled at what is happening but are unable to stop it while the province sits idly by.

We sense that tolerance is wearing thin. We ask that all of our laws be applied to all people equally so that all policies do indeed reflect our laws.

Wage is up

The minimum wage is going up.

This is the least amount of money a person can be paid.

It is now $5.50 an hour. On April 1, it will go up to $6 an hour.

The government says this will help 75,000 workers in B.C.

A lot of those workers are women. And a lot of them are under the age of 25.

But one politician says small businesses will not be able to pay the increase.

Jack Weisgerber is the leader of the Social Credit party.

He says there will be fewer jobs as a result.

Games

Diane Pasek and Melanie McPherson are from Kitimat.

They were in Terrace last week. They came to promote the B.C. Winter Games.

They will take place in Kitimat at the end of February.

People from all over the province will come to the games.

BUSINESS REVIEW

Eskay gold mine plan firming up

TERRACE — A tonne of north-west gold-bearing ore is in Colorado waiting to be put through a test recovery plant.

It's a miniature of what Homestake Canada wants to install at its Eskay Creek property and is needed to determine how it will work, says company president Jack Thompson.

Testing in a Colorado lab should take two to three months and will be followed by a formal application to the provincial government for approval to construct a gold mine.

There'll also be a feasibility study done to better determine costs in order for Homestake to make a final development decision.

Thompson said the development should cost between $180-$200 million and have a life span of eight to 10 years employing approximately 230 people.

Houston is to be the beneficiary of a lot of those jobs because the company wants to use an area near Equity silver mine to process the ore.

Homestake says 80 people will be employed at the minesite and 125 to 150 direct jobs will be created in Houston.

Homestake wants to process the ore at Houston because a lot of the environmental information it needs is available through the Equity experience.

Hydro lines, a road and skilled work force are also close at hand.

The ore will be taken from Eskay Creek by road to Bob Quinn Lake on Hwy 37 where it will be transferred from mining trucks to highway trucks for the journey to Houston.

Mine workers will be flown in and out of the mine site.

Work to date indicates the Eskay property can support a 360 tonne per day plant producing 250,000 ounces of gold, 11 million ounces of silver, 8,000 tonnes of zinc and 1,000 tonnes of copper a year.

Homestake is having meetings in Stewart Feb. 11, Smithers Feb. 10 and Houston Feb. 9 to explain its project.

"We know the test plant will work. It's a matter of fine tuning to get the best extraction for the highest value of ore we can," said Thompson.

Thompson described the recovery process as a pressure cooker, breaking down the ore to expose the gold.

He said the process accelerates very quickly the natural process that occurs when rock is exposed to air.

Still to be decided is what to do with the estimated 1.4 million tonnes of tailings that will be produced during the life of the mine.

Although the company is most interested in gold and silver, recovering zinc and copper will reduce the chances of acid generation, Thompson added.

The pressure cooker process is being used by Homestake in a mine it owns in California and by other companies.

Also needed is a road to the property. Permission for that will be requested when Homestake submits its application to the provincial government.

It'll reach down from a route constructed into the Iskut Valley from Hwy 37 near Bob Quinn Lake nearly two years ago.

The Eskay Creek area became one of the hottest gold plays in North America in the late 1980s when a number of companies, including ones owned by Murray Pezim, began staking claims.

Homestake also ended up with a 20 per cent position in the Cominco-owned Snip gold mine in the Iskut Valley through its International Corona acquisition.

Homestake already had an 83 per cent ownership position in the Golden Bear mine west of Dease Lake through its control of North American Metals.

Moving along

WORK IS proceeding on the addition to the Terrace-Kitimat airport. It'll mean a heated, covered baggage waiting area and more space for airport facilities. That's Wayne Watson Construction carpenter foreman Robert Schulz looking at the plans.

8 Glasses A Day Water Facts

WEIGHT LOSS

Most of us are aware of the expression "drink eight glasses of water a day". Why so much? Is it really that important to keep the kidneys working so hard? You bet it is. According to Dr. Donald Robertson, M.D., M.Sc., drinking plenty of pure, clean water may be the only true "magic potion" for permanent weight loss.

Water suppresses the appetite naturally and helps the body use up stored fat. The kidneys need plenty of water to work properly. If they can't work to their capacity, some of the work load is passed on to the liver. One of the liver's most important jobs is to turn stored fat into energy. If the liver is too busy taking on the work load of the kidneys, it can't be using the body's fat stores properly. The result - fat remains stored in the body and weight loss stops. So dieters, drink up!

Smokes boosting band's income

TERRACE — The sale of cheap tax-free cigarettes has been one of the most lucrative sources of income for the Kltsunkalum band in recent years.

Chief councillor Steve Roberts says the price of $34.95 a carton at the band-operated House of Sim-Oi-Ghets crafts store draws natives from across the north-west.

"We get customers from north, south, east, west — all over the place," Roberts says. "It's quite a money-maker for us."

There's a lot of extra paperwork involved, because customers must present their status cards and sign a register in order to buy the cigarettes tax-free.

But he said the revenue that comes in more than makes up the difference.

People affected if it closes

Keep tree nursery open

Dear Sir:

In December 1993 the Terrace branch of Pacific Regeneration Technologies Inc. (silviculture nursery) will be closed. This closure means the loss of jobs for approximately 50 full and part-time employees.

That involves approximately $600,000 in lost wages and revenue to this community. This figure does not include about $90,000 being spent indirectly in the community eg. taxes, water, natural gas, repairs and maintenance, etc.

The economy of Terrace and the surrounding area is heavily dependent on the logging industry. For this reason we feel we need a silviculture nursery in this area; and with more support from local logging companies the Ministry of Forests and the federal government, we could have a viable partnership for the reforestation of the area.

There are no comparable jobs as far as wages and hours go. Our job skills for the most part are not applicable for other jobs in Terrace or surrounding area.

Therefore, there will be another 40-50 people looking for jobs in an already high unemployment area. At some point some of these families will be forced onto the welfare system.

Retraining is a wonderful idea, but for some families is basically impossible because they need money coming in to support their families. The bottom line is there will be fewer jobs in this community.

This nursery has been used for educational purposes. We have enjoyed seeing children from various schools come and tour the nursery every spring and summer. We hope that they have learned something from their experience. Through our horticulture program we have supported the City of Terrace, through the beautification society.

Our intent is not to lay blame on anyone for the closure but rather to see if there is a viable solution to this matter, whether it be more or new contracts for the growing of seedlings, government assistance somehow or assistance from the private sector.

Declining economy needs new investment right away

Dear Sir:

The recent budget deficit announcements highlight the fact that the B.C. economy is still doing very poorly. Unemployment and poor business performance mean that there are fewer tax dollars collected by our governments.

We seem to be in a descending economic death spiral — a weak economy means fewer jobs, greater unemployment and reduced tax collections at a time when the tax needs are rising.

What this province needs is some strong leadership to encourage the development of new jobs.

Of course the obvious reply is that there must be a real shortage of investment capital in B.C. to create these new jobs and industries — right? Wrong.

One area where there is investment capital is mining — but it is not being spent in B.C. The investment capital today is going to places like Chile and Mexico.

Mining has a great future in the developing world economy and unfortunately, we are watching it pass by. Why do our mining business leaders feel they have to go outside of Canada?

I don't know all the answers, but increasingly I am being told that the mining executives in this province do not feel welcome.

The situation is not hopeless, but the politicians of this province need to be leaders. They have the responsibility and the power to make things better.

Mammogram note

Dear Sir:

Recently there has been a lot of discussion about the value of mammograms.

I believe that the use of mammograms for the early detection and treatment of breast cancer is a valid intervention as long as the mammogram is 'read' by a radiographer whose primary responsibility is to interpret mammograms.

If you have a mammogram of diagnostic work-up films done please be sure to ask your doctor to send them to a radiographer whose only job is to interpret mammograms.

Three residents killed

Accidents probed

TERRACE — The highways ministry continues to investigate a series of accidents near Hazelton which killed five people, including three Terrace residents.

The accidents took place during snow storms Jan. 19, 20 and 22. Two took place between Gitsegukla and Kitwanga while the third happened east of New Hazelton.

Bulkley highways district manager Loren Kelly in Smithers said no action has been taken yet as a result of the accidents.

"There can be multiple things leading to an accident and at this point none of that has been determined," he said.

The regional highways office in Terrace has also taken an interest in the cause of the accidents, said highways official Dan Stead.

Killed Jan. 22 were Amber Demmitt, 17, and father Jerry, 44, while mother Alma, 43, was injured.

Police say the Demmitt vehicle was eastbound when it failed to make a corner 8km west of Gitsegukla. It crossed into the oncoming lane and collided with an unloaded logging truck driven by Ross Holton, 31, of Terrace. He was treated for minor injuries at the scene.

Sterling James Haugland of Terrace was killed Jan. 19 when his unloaded logging truck was struck by a semi-trailer driven by Ralph Harris of 100 Mile House.

New Hazelton RCMP said the Harris vehicle failed to make a righthand corner and crossed into the oncoming lane.

Haugland was dead at the scene and Harris died later at St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver.

New Hazelton RCMP said weather conditions and speed appeared to be contributing factors.

The third fatal accident involving a single vehicle took place Jan. 20 at Poryphry Creek east of New Hazelton.

The driver and lone occupant, Owen Brandt, 68, of Ketchikan, Alaska, died when his vehicle travelled off to the right of the road and rolled.

New Hazelton RCMP said seatbelts weren't worn.

In jail for fraud

TERRACE — A local woman has been sentenced to six months in jail for welfare fraud.

Judy Linda Lambright was convicted by a Supreme Court jury here Jan. 15 after a three-day trial.

She is also required to pay back to the ministry of social services the $5,491.14 she fraudulently collected.

The court heard evidence that Lambright collected social assistance from April 1987 until March 1988 without declaring income she earned working part-time as a bartender at the Royal Canadian Legion.

Lambright's lawyer argued the entire welfare system is too confusing and that she did submit her paystubs.

She had no prior record of convictions.

Ship unused books to Zimbabwe

"FOR BURNING" says the felt marker scrawl on the side of the box.

Inside are old elementary school textbooks, cast-offs from Veritas School.

There are ten boxes of them, gathering dust in a warehouse at Northwest Community College right next to shelves containing hundreds of old college textbooks.

"They're basically rotting on the shelves," says NWCC Student Association president Ken Hawkins.

If Hawkins has his way, the books — all outdated and useless to the college — will be packed up and shipped to Zimbabwe, where another NWCC student, Kirsten Murphy, has been working with development agencies.

The books would be invaluable in the developing country, Murphy said in a recent letter.

"They would be appreciated in a big bad way. It does not matter how old or what condition they're in. Books are literally gold in Zimbabwe."

"They would be appreciated in a big bad way," she wrote. "It does not matter how old or what condition they're in. Books are literally gold in Zimbabwe."

Hawkins pulls one of the books off a shelf.

Being a Nursing Aide, it says. "Tell me they couldn't use this stuff," he mutters.

A bookcase full of trades course textbooks includes titles such as Concrete Technology, Practical Problems in Math For Carpenters and All About Small Gas

BOOK WAREHOUSE: Student Association president Ken Hawkins and women's issues rep Melanie Matherly hope to help ship these outdated, but still useful books from a warehouse at Northwest Community College to Zimbabwe.

Engines.

There are dictionaries and atlases. There are discarded Adult Basic Education course booklets and workbooks on subjects from nutrition to textiles.

The Veritas boxes contain many elementary school level science and English textbooks.

"It's just perfect for someone who's just learning how to read English," Hawkins says. "This is valuable material to someone in a third-world country."

So far however, Hawkins says, they've found no answer to the main problem: how do you ship a pick-up truck load of books to Zimbabwe?

"One guy told us he could get us a good rate to ship them to the incinerator in Williams Lake. But that's about it so far."

He says the student association has even talked about starting to mail the books overseas, one-by-one.

Above all, Hawkins said, he doesn't want to see the books burned.

"It's not a pleasing thought," he said. "It seems like an awful waste of materials that could be used."

One Canadian aid agency contacted told the students it no longer ships books overseas because of the expense.

"We'll find some way to ship them," he predicted.

Any volunteers who want to help coordinate the project can contact Ken Hawkins at 635-6511 (ext. 279).

A banner month

THE CAMPAIGN BEGINS: Heart and Stroke Awareness Month kicked off for February with a flag-raising ceremony in front of city hall last week. That's local branch president Doug Patterson, mayor Jack Talstra and organizer Betty Campbell. The campaign raised $15,000 last February for a $42,000 total in 1992 for heart and stroke research, education and prevention. The Heart and Stroke Foundation of B.C. and Yukon hope to exceed the $7.7 million raised in the province last year. Canvassers hit the streets this week soliciting funds. There will also be an information display in the mall Feb. 11-13.

Burkett fund grows

A trust fund set up to assist the sole survivor of a Dec. 30 fire which killed five people is near its $20,000 goal.

Proceeds from a sold out benefit dance over the weekend and from a bingo have helped raise money for Jeannette Burkett, who lost her husband and three children in a fatal house fire in Thornhill Dec. 30.

The family had no insurance on their log house in Thornhill and their car, also destroyed, was not insured against fire damage.

The Saturday dance, organized by the Skeena Valley Rotary Club with help from numerous businesses and individuals, was expected to raise nearly $4,000.

The Vancouver Canucks donated a jersey autographed by all the team members that was auctioned off at the dance.

Skeena Valley Rotary's Ed Graydon said the 225 $10 tickets sold out almost immediately.

The Jan. 20 bingo sponsored by the Order of the Royal Purple and held at the Lucky Dollar Bingo Palace raised $6,333.66. A further $455.74 in donations from bingo players and $50 Saan gift certificate were gathered the same evening.

"We had 336 people. It was an excellent turnout considering it was a late night bingo. The news spread by word of mouth," said Lucky Dollar spokesman John Becher.

Order of the Royal Purple representative Shirley Townsend said the attendance topped the average 250 people who would normally turn out.

The Order of the Royal Purple and Lucky Dollar Bingo Palace went together on a similar bingo two years ago to help a family whose home was destroyed by fire.

Contributions to the Jeannette Burkett trust fund can be made at the Bank of Montreal.

AROUND TOWN

Potluck help sought

HELP!

The city's annual Mar. 13th International Potluck Dinner needs volunteers.

The dinners have been outstanding cooperative efforts in the past, with participants sampling food from diverse cultures around the world. Nineteen countries were represented in last year's culinary extravaganza.

This year should be no exception — if the volunteers are found. If you're interested in helping out, there will be a meeting at 7:30 p.m., Monday Feb. 8 upstairs at the St. Matthews Centre. For more information call Linda Lee at 635-6631.

The Terrace District Multicultural Association is also organizing a project marking Mar. 21 as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Several events are being planned, including a mall display and a ribbon campaign. The association has received a $4,000 Multiculturalism Canada grant for the project.

Coming to grips with emotions

A WORKSHOP on dealing with emotional pain takes place this weekend at Zion Baptist Church.

It's being conducted by counsellor Dr. Gary Kalmbach of Vancouver, said church pastor Ron Orr.

And it's the first time the church has undertaken such a venture, he said. The sessions take place Friday and Saturday nights from 7-9 p.m. and Sunday afternoon from 4-6 p.m.

High achievers sought

A FEW GOOD PEOPLE are being sought for B.C.'s highest award.

The government is looking for nominees to receive the Order of British Columbia. Past winners include Olympic gold medal skier Kerrin Lee-Gartner, rescue helicopter pilot Ron Eland and workplace safety activist Wolfgang Zimmermann.

The award is made each year to individuals who have excelled in any field benefitting the people of B.C. or elsewhere. Nominations close Mar. 17. Forms are available by writing to: Order of British Columbia, Parliament Buildings, Victoria B.C., V8V 1X4.

Gathering of the clan

The Bill Middleton clan gathered for what turned out to be a five-generation get-together on Dec. 6.

The most senior of those in attendance at Bill and Joan's Walsh Ave. home was "great-great grandmother" Ivy Middleton. She'll be 86 come April.

Next in line is Bill Middleton — the great grandfather. He's followed by his daughter Tammy and her new wee son Daniel, who completes the five generations.

Daniel was born Nov. 25 at Mills Memorial Hospital.

Ivy Middleton was born in Pritchard, B.C. in 1907. She and husband Jack, who worked on the railroad, had nine children.

Many people would remember Ivy's mother-in-law — Annie Middleton — who was the postmistress in Houston for many years.

Ivy still lives on her own in Smithers. She's in fairly good health and still drives her own car.

Bill Middleton was born June 13, 1931 at Decker Lake, B.C. He was married to Joan on Feb. 17, 1951, by the Rev. Hinchcliff, who came to Joan's family farm at Quick, B.C. to marry them.

Joan had been born on that same farm on Feb. 18, 1933. The couple moved to Terrace in 1956.

Bill first worked for Columbia Construction with a crew building the highway from Terrace to the hot springs.

Bill's now retired but Joan continues to at the Emerson Clinic, where she's worked for the last 13 and a half years.

They have four children, nine grand-children and now one new great-grandson.

And now a bit about Joan Middleton's grandmother — a real Bulkley valley pioneer — Grandma Wakefield.

She and her husband Karl left their Oklahoma farm to come to B.C. — the land of great opportunity, so they'd been told.

After a stay in Vancouver, they headed 500 miles north to Port Essington on a boat called The Cammosun. After a three-day stop, they loaded up their possessions and a team of horses and started a seven-day ride upriver on an old sternwheel steamer.

The North Star chugged them up the Skeena to Hazelton, where they loaded up a wagon to travel to their new property.

They felt proud as they jounced along the trail, as it was the first time a wagon had ever rambled through the valley. They were one of the first 10 settlers in the valley.

When they arrived at their land, they pitched a tent and lived their until a small log cabin was built.

ON STAGE

Mind games at heart of Thriller

Suspense and laughs — that's what local theatre fans want, according to recent Terrace Little Theatre surveys. And that's just what they'll get, says TLT's Karla Hennig. She's directing Thriller of the Year, the nail-biting whodunnit with a touch of comedy and a lot of surprises. After comedies, mysteries were the number one choice of most people, and this play is both.

"It's a departure for me," Hennig says. "I've directed comedies and mysteries, but trying to balance the comedy with the scariness is a wonderful challenge."

"The suspense builds, and then the comedy relieves the suspense — and then it builds again."

Hennig, who's directed more than 50 productions in the past eleven years, predicts audiences will like that roller-coaster effect.

"It's something that's really different," she says, "and it makes a terrific show."

The story follows an award-winning mystery writer as she dodges the life-threatening events taken directly from the plot of her book.

As Hennig says, "The scariest parts of a thriller aren't what you see, but what you imagine."

Thriller of the Year plays two weekends at the McColl Playhouse, February 4-6, and 11-13. Tickets are on sale at Carter's Jewellers and the Bank of Montreal.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Shopping green can be a tricky business

Recently, a friend of mine told me he was not going to eat beef anymore. He was giving it up to "save the rainforest."

It seemed like an honourable reason for making that choice. I was sorry to tell my friend that his choice would have little impact on the deforestation of Brazil.

There's a lot of misinformation out there about how the food choices we make can affect the environment. There are reasons for that mis-information being spread.

One of these is that much of the information we get in Canada comes from the United States. And what is true about food production in the States is not necessarily true in Canada.

So how can you eat to help preserve our environment?

The first choice that you can make is to consume smaller portions of meat, poultry and fish.

There's nothing "anti-ecological" about these foods. These animals spend most of their lives turning foods that we can't eat (like grass, insects and sea plankton) into foods that we can eat (like beef and chicken).

Some animals are fed grain for a period of time before slaughter. That's done to increase the "marbling", or fat content of the meat.

So, by choosing smaller portions, and leaner cuts of meat, you decrease the amount of resources that are going into the production of the foods you consume. You'll also increase the demand for leaner meats.

Looking to our old friend, the Canada Food Guide, we learn that we should be eating about two servings of meat per day. Each of those servings should be about 2-3 ounces.

Our bodies are very good at preserving protein, so we only need about 4 - 6 ounces of meat or poultry per day. Any amount over that is a waste of resources (not to mention the extra calories and saturated fat). In other words, a poor environmental choice.

That isn't to say that meats are the only foods that can have environmental impact.

The produce that we receive in Canada comes from a variety of places around the world. A head of lettuce, grown with pesticides and fertilizer in California and trucked in a refrigerated car to the Northwest, is a pretty energy-intensive process. So are grapes flown from Chile, or strawberries flown from New Zealand. Check the country of origin when you're shopping for fresh produce. Canadian produce is limited in the winter, so try choosing frozen produce. It still has to be shipped in refrigerated cars, but it can be packed more densely, and is more efficient to transport. It also has a better nutrient content. It was picked when it was fully ripe, and flash frozen to preserve its nutrition.

You may also want to choose organic produce. It's grown using only natural fertilizers, and has no pesticides used on it. That increases the natural fertility of the soil, and minimizes the environmental impact.

The most notable difference is that organic produce is not as perfect looking as other fruits and vegetables.

Not all apples are big, red and round, and not all cabbages are uniformly green. On the other hand, the flavour of these foods is fantastic.

Organic produce also tends to be slightly more expensive than other produce because it's grown and packaging. Again, the environment benefits and your health can benefit.

Processed foods take more energy to prepare, and have more fat, sugar and salt processed into them. They also tend to have more packaging around them.

Choosing foods you prepare yourself means you're saving energy, and gaining good nutrition.

So for a healthier world and a healthier YOU, trying cutting back your meat servings, choosing local produce, or frozen foods, and choosing organic more often. Buy unprepared foods and cook them yourself.

You can be assured the earth and your body will appreciate it.

on a smaller scale.

The last thing that you can do to reduce the environmental impact of your food, is to choose foods with a minimum of processing

Correction

A story in the Jan. 27 issue contained information on donations by the Elks and Order of the Royal Purple to the hospital.

It said a two-year effort to raise $23,100 was devoted to the CT scan drive.

In fact, the money is for equipment to the hospital. It went to purchase an isolette (incubator), an oxymeter to measure the blood/oxygen level and a fetal heart monitor.

The Elks and Order of the Royal Purple do sell Dr. R.E.M. Lee Hospital Foundation cash calendars and those proceeds go toward the CT scan drive.

Last summer's mysterious disappearance of close to a quarter million Fraser River sockeye salmon has to be the biggest whodunit in the history of North American Fisheries. When the enormous discrepancy between the number of fish recorded by the echo sounder at Mission and the number of early run summer sockeye that had reached the spawning grounds was first discovered there was a great ballyhoo as accusing fingers were pointed in every direction.

Faced with a rising tide of discontent, the Federal Government hired two sleuths, the redoubtable Peter Pearce, author of several Royal Commissions, and the grey preeminence of fisheries science, Dr. Peter Larkin, then gave them two months to unravel the mystery of the vanishing sockeye.

After considerable study and analysis the detectives have published their conclusions in a report entitled Managing Salmon in the Fraser; it's fascinating reading. Now that the Columbia has been dammed forever the Fraser has the largest runs of salmon in the world. It becomes apparent as you read the report that managing them is a task that the Lord himself might find formidable.

Consider first the migratory habits of the fish who approach the Fraser each summer via the straits of Georgia and Juan de Fuca where they are fished by sportfishermen, commercial trollers, the seine fleet, the gill net fleet and finally by the many native bands fishing along the length of the Fraser. The same fish must run a similar gauntlet in the U.S. How these fish are allocated to each country is a matter of negotiations between them in a forum called The Pacific Salmon Commission.

In 1992 the Commission failed to come to an agreement for the first time. As a result the respective managers of each country developed separate plans and the waters started to muddy.

The mandate of the Department of Fisheries — reaffirmed in two landmark court cases — insists that priority be given to native needs then to those of the commercial and sport fisheries, provided the conservation requirements of the stocks are met. The problem is the native fisheries are the last to see the fish. As a result native requirements haven't always been met. To solve this dilemma the Department of Fisheries entered into co-management agreements with native bands throughout B.C. The results were not wholly satisfactory. Just prior to the commencement of the season agreements were nearing settlement with the Stolo the Musqueam and Tsawassen Bands, but significantly six bands on the lower Fraser, like numerous bands upstream, did not join in the process.

The natives have always maintained that historical practise confirms their right to barter and sell fish. In the past the Department did not agree which led to some heated disputes some times resulting in violence. Given the latest court rulings the Department reluctantly allowed natives who had entered into comanagement regimes the right to sell fish which naturally led to accusations of preferential treatment.

To see that the sales proceeded smoothly it was necessary to train guardians, and set up a new monitoring system. With the face of the inland fishery undergoing a major change, with the number of nets doubling the need for increased enforcement was obvious. To make matters worse, the budget-strapped fisheries officers were under orders not to lay charges without prior authorization from above. Prosecutions were to be avoided while the new agreements were being negotiated with natives.

The result? The officers morale broke down as things tended to anarchy.

Fishing camps showed up along the river, vehicles from stateside joined the larger than usual number alongside the river. The little town of Yale experienced its second rush, a silver rush this time: refrigerator trucks and campers lined the highway.

So what caused the sockeye disappearance? Overfishing in the river conclude Pearce and Larkin. No surprise here. Men of all races are part of the human race. Give us a chance to aggrandize and we will. Many native fishermen on the Fraser took advantage of a lack of policing to increase their income considerably.

The encouraging aspect of the debacle on the Fraser this summer is that the bands who entered into the fishing agreements under the Lower Fraser Fishing Authority were moderately successful, the real trouble coming from further upstream.

Bluebacks take their times

Timing is everything when it comes to qualifying for the provincial 'AA' championships.

For northwestern swimmers, the Jan. 22-24 Eurocan Invitational meet in Kitimat was the last chance to do so.

And several Terrace Bluebacks seized the opportunity to book their berth.

Seth Downs, 13, put it together in the 50m free with a 30.94 swim, more than half a second inside the qualifying time.

Randee Armstrong had more than a second to spare in her 50m back stroke event for 9-10 years girls and Dylan MacCormac was more than two seconds faster than the mark in the boys 13-14 years 200m breast race.

Although already on their way to the 'AA's from earlier meet results, four Bluebacks added more strings to their bows while in Kitimat.

Marina Checkley (200m free; 50m fly), Kevin Andolfatto (200m free), Chris Kerman (200 individual medley) and Jamie Kerman (200m breast) all clocked 'AA' qualifying times in their respective divisions.

And Tristan Brown, 10, put it together in winning the 100m individual medley, finishing in 1:38.02, three seconds inside the qualifying barrier.

Sarah Thompson, Ian Taylor and Jason Kumpolt -- they all qualified at earlier meets -- round out the Blueback contingent of qualifiers.

The new additions to the Terrace list were in line with coach Mike Carlyle's prediction following the Bluebacks own December meet.

There was also more good news for the club in the 'AAA' chase where Audrey Erb got off to a great start by posting a qualifying time in the first event of the meet, the girls 10 years and under 200m freestyle.

Before the weekend was over, she was to add the 50m fly to her 'AAA' time collection.

Kevin Andolfatto's second place finish to clubmate Garth Coxford in the 50m free was fast enough to get inside the mark for 11-12 years boys.

And Tristan Brown (50m back), Bryan Palahicky (100m breast) and Aimee Peacock (50m free) all added 'AAA' times.

The Bluebacks' total of six 'AAA' and 10 'AA' qualifying times was numerically the best of the meet.

However, while Prince Rupert swimmers posted 15 qualifying times, nine of those were at the 'AAA' level. Kitimat Marlins sped to nine 'AA' and five 'AAA' times.

Leading the Bluebacks to their second place finish at the Eurocan Invitational, Garth Coxford remained invincible in boys 11-12 years, posting seven wins.

In the same division, Andolfatto had another strong meet with a win, three seconds and three thirds.

Erb chalked up seven top three finishes, including two wins, while Brown finished the weekend with three victories and four runner-up spots.

In the girls 15 years and up events, the Blueback contingent kept up its winning ways with Walker (four), Jocelyn Coxford (two) and Peacock (one) combining for seven first place results. The trio also accounted for seven top three placings.

Palahicky and Liam Murphy provided Terrace's other two victories.

PUSHING POWER: Blanes rink sweepers Barry Penner and Paulette Patterson put muscle into their battle with the Kruisselbrink rink during the Legion Open on Saturday. See next week's issue for complete bonspiel results.

Bowlers
come up
big for kids

Once again, the local B.C. Bowls for Kids was a big success, raising more than $4,000 for the B.C. Variety Club.

Of that, $3,607 of pledges came in from the 30 bowlers who took part in the Jan. 23 Bowl for Kids night, the Special Olympics group raised $247 and the Golden Agers added another $200.

Richard Rauschenberger receives a plaque and a Variety Club sweatshirt in recognition of his exceptional effort in obtaining $824 in pledges.

Remember, the B.C. Variety Club Telethon takes place Feb. 13 and 14.

And, if you tune in on Saturday, Feb. 13 between 8 p.m. and 10 p.m., you will spot some familiar local faces.

One will be Diane Francis who, as provincial chairman of the Golden Age program, will join the provincial board of directors and zone directors on the Gold Panel for that period.

Gold Panel members will have their own personal phone number so you can phone them direct to make your pledge.

Working the main board during that same period will be Terrace's Kelly Francis, Doug and Marg Mumford and Monica Peacock. Phone the main number and you may get a chance to make your pledge through them.

Most people heading for Greece in the summer won't be thinking of taking their gloves along with them.

But that's just what Joey Losier is expected to do.

That's because his Grecian trip will be as a member of the Canadian National B boxing team.

And that's not all the travelling he'll be doing if all goes according to plan.

Local club coach Jeff Dilley said the national squad's itinerary also includes visits to Hungary and France.

Dilley said the matches he'll find himself in as a member of the national team will prove invaluable to Losier.

"You can't get that type of experience in B.C.," he pointed out.

And Losier will at least be assured of getting a fight, something's he's been having a problem getting lately here.

His planned bout at the recent Emerald Gloves in Vancouver, for example, was cancelled when the Seattle fighter he was to face couldn't make the trip.

Losier's next ring appearances will be this weekend at the Alberta Golden Gloves where he will be part of the B.C. team.

Losier isn't the only member of the Terrace boxing club who's having trouble getting bouts.

Buddy Doane's trip to the Emeralds ended up with him sitting on the sidelines when the two potential opponents declined to climb into the ring.

The problem, Dilley explained, was Doane had five fights under his belt to the other boxers' one apiece. It therefore wasn't unreasonable their coaches didn't want them to fight Doane.

Pledgers ready to ride

By RON NIESNER

For the past 15 years, members of the Skeena Valley Snowmobile Association and the local Lions society have met the challenge of co-sponsoring the annual winter recreational event called Snowarama.

With the support of the community and snowmobile riders of all ages, more than $89,000 has been collected in the Terrace area over those years.

Each year the event chairman strives to top the previous Snowarama total and each rider tries to top the next in most pledge money raised.

This is the only competition in an event which is pure fun, a day touring through the beauty of the local area on a 100km course.

Approximately 70 riders take part in the event each year, many returning year after year.

This year's event is scheduled for this coming Sunday, Feb. 7 and anyone is welcome to pick up a pledge sheet and join in.

On the day, bring your pledge sheet and snowmobile to the designated location, sign in at the administration booth, then snowmobile the route.

Remember, this is not a race so travel slowly for the safety of all participants.

At press time, the venue for Snowarama had not yet been finalized. That information can be obtained by checking the community noticeboard TV channel or by phoning Earl Larson at 635-5930. All pledge sheet holders will be advised by phone of where the run will be taking place.

Part way down the trail there will be break stops where hot dogs and refreshments will be provided for riders.

At the end of the ride, the Lions club will also serve up a hot bowl of chili for all riders.

This event would not be possible without the time donated by the Lions club, committee members and the community.

Terrace area businesses also show their support through donations of cash and merchandise.

Money raised from the event goes towards the operation of the Easter Seal House. Since 1955, the B.C. Lions society has provided low cost accommodation at Easter Seal House for families visiting Vancouver to obtain treatment for children with disabilities.

In 1985, the society realized its dream of building a new Easter Seal House in to replace the original facility which was no longer large enough to meet demand.

The new $2.5 million house on Oak St. provides shelter for more than 100 children and parents per night in its 53 self-contained units.

The first floor is completely wheelchair accessible with specially designed bathrooms and kitchens.

That and competent and dedicated staff make Easter Seal House a modern, comfortable haven for families far from home.

NOTE BOOK

Open opens

Dart players from across the northwest will gather at the Royal Canadian Legion this weekend for the second annual Terrace Open.

Play gets under way Friday at 8 p.m. with the mixed doubles. Saturday action opens with men's doubles and ladies' singles and concludes that afternoon with ladies' doubles and men's singles.

Top tenner

Nisga'a secondary school's boy's basketball team is climbing the provincial rankings.

The B.C. High School Boys' Basketball association poll released last week places Nisga'a at number eight in the 'A' division, up one place from the previous rankings.

Early birds

The baselines may still be under a snowy blanket, but it's never too early to start planning a new season.

With that in mind, local Senior Men's Fastball organizers are asking anyone thinking about playing this season to get in touch now.

Phone 638-0686 if you're interested in joining the boys of summer.

See the Jays

This spring some lucky resident is going to be able to see the Blue Jays in action live.

And they won't have to travel to Toronto or spend a small fortune to do it.

The Jays game is being played in Vancouver as part of the world series champions pre-season and is top prize in a raffle being run by the Seniors Games Zone 10 group.

The winner gets tickets to the game, return airfare and accommodation plus $200 in cash.

Other prizes include a telephone-fax centre and three 35mm cameras.

Tickets cost $5 each and are available from Zone 10 members. For more information, phone Bob Goodvin at 638-8648.

PETITE POWER. Terrace Petite division ringette players hosted visitors from Vanderhoof and Burns Lake (above) Jan. 22-24 and emerged with two wins and two losses. Meanwhile, the Tween team were making it clear their recent promotion hadn't changed their winning ways.

Tweens burn Lakers

The Nechako North Coast Tweens ringettes kept their impressive season's record alive Jan. 22-24 as they took visiting Burns Lake four straight.

Clobbering the Lakers 6-1 in the opener, the locals then reeled off 8-3, 7-5 and 5-2 victories to complete the sweep.

That performance means the Tweens will go into next month's provincial 'C' championships with a record of only one loss on the season.

Not that they won all those as Tweens, Sharon Prinz points out, because the team began the season in the Petites class.

Prinz explained Tweens are aged 13 years and under while Petites are 11 years and under. However, ringette rules allow class 'C', or new clubs to have over-age players on a team.

Because only three of the Terrace squad were in the Tween age group, the team played as Petites with those trio as overagers.

That changed after last November's Joy Hoffman Memorial tournament in Prince George. There, Terrace annihilated all-comers, outscoring their opponents 64-5.

As a result, ringette's organizing body moved Terrace up to the level of the oldest players: in other words, they now have to play as Tweens with a host of under-age players.

As for what's waiting for them at the Mar. 6-7 Port Coquitlam provincials, Prinz said that was an unknown. "We haven't had a chance to play against any southern teams so we just don't know," she explained.

Even so, Prinz is convinced the Tweens will be very competitive at the Mar. 5-7 Port Coquitlam provincials. After all, she pointed out, the Burns Lake team they'd just faced would be competing at the 'B' level provincials, meaning all its players were Tween-agers.

In other Jan. 22-24 action here, the Terrace Petites -- they've also been moved up, from the Novice division -- ended their weekend with a .500 record.

Terrace dropped Vanderhoof 7-2 and 6-3 but found the Burns Lake team too much for them, going down 13-1, 6-1.

Prinz said Vanderhoof had also sent over its Novice (9 years and under) team so Terrace and Burns Lake combined their youngest Petites into a make up team to provide Vanderhoof with some game action.

The result was a three game sweep for the combined team during which they did not give up a single goal. Scores were 4-0, 9-0 and 5-0.

Prinz said there are 23 girls enrolled in ringette here this season, about the same as last year, and most are 11 years old or younger.

But that youth will prove an advantage in the long run, allowing the players time to develop their skills before they reach the Tween level, she pointed out. That, in turn, will mean better, more competitive teams.

HOGLINES

By LINDA MOORE

WHEN MANY SPORTS writers describe what makes "dream teams" or top athletes so good, physical fitness is high on the list.

Mental toughness is a priority too and, in many sports, team work is a must.

As well, most mention the assistance of a fine coach, planning strategy and providing a positive environment in which the athletes can perform well.

But, when a writer expounds on these same qualities in top curling teams, people tend to scoff.

Many say that curling teams win because they get hot - or lucky.

Although "breaks" happen in all sports, most curling teams excel because their members meet the standards in the areas of technical and tactical expertise as well as fitness and psychological preparation.

These are the qualities the best curlers have in common:

Consistency - all top curlers deliver the stone consistently.

It doesn't matter if their styles are unique or unconventional, if the player does the same thing with the rock each time they throw, they will find success.

Great curlers also have a "feel" for the ice. No matter was the ice surface is like, fast or slow, frosty or not, the player can adjust their delivery and the weight of the stone accordingly.

Fitness - More and more, fitness plays a part in the game.

The physical demands on a skip are not as great, but the other three players have to be prepared at some point to sweep hard and then step into the hack and throw a delicate draw.

With competitions running a week in length, all four players are better off if they're in good shape.

Mental preparedness - great curlers have the ability to prepare mentally for every test; to approach tough, pressure-packed games as opportunities, not threats; to be positive every time they step into the hack; and to control the nerves.

Team work - working together towards a team goal is and important quality for all curlers.

Many good throwers never win simply because they can't put their egos aside and fit into a team structure.

Each player must accept the roles which are unique to their position, try to excel at it and support their teammates in their endeavours.

When asked about their curling, great players don't say "I won," but "We won".

Coaching - the finishing touch to a top team is the coach.

I see every team as benefiting in some way from that "outside" assistance.

For some teams, the coach may also be a manager, ensuring the travel arrangements and competition details are worked out in advance.

For many, the coach provides a buffer between players and holds team meetings at which any personality conflict issues can be ironed out.

Coaches can also scout opponents and other sheets of ice and help with season planning and game strategy.

The best players are not born, they work hard to acquire their skills.

Commitment and dedication are vital in all sports, curling included.

Each of the qualities mentioned above is achieved through training.

During the next month, curling championships are being held in all parts of the province. If you want to see some great athletes in action - people who work hard at their sport - check out curling!

In regards to the newspaper article in the January 20th issue, it seems I have come under fire for making an off handed remark toward receiving no help from anyone except one brother. At the time I was being interviewed, the topic was organizing fund raising. Though it may seem to all of those that chipped that I sounded ungrateful or even dishonest, but let me reassure you, that was not the case. I am very grateful for all the help I received from my family and friends and especially to my one brother whom I am told organized everything for us. I am truly sorry for any hurt feelings I may have caused. Shirley Middleton. 1p41

JOHN EVANS, President of Re/Max of Terrace, wishes to add clarification to the ad which appeared in the Wednesday, January 13, 1993 edition of the Terrace Standard in which it was stated that Re/Max of Terrace was the top contributing M.L.S. office in Terrace - 1992.

Contributions to the Northwest Real Estate Board are made by each individual salesperson and, on this basis, the six realtors presently representing Re/Max of Terrace made the highest combined contributions of any office in Terrace to the Northwest Real Estate Board. However, a portion of this volume was earned in another office, prior to Joyce Findlay and Steve Cook joining Re/Max during 1992.

It is, therefore, technically incorrect that Re/Max of Terrace was the top contributing M.L.S. office in Terrace. Re/Max of Terrace apologizes for this error and the concern it may have caused.

Re/Max of Terrace would like to congratulate CENTURY 21, Wightman & Smith Realty for achieving the status of top contributing M.L.S. office in Terrace - 1992.

It's the Experience!

Portrait of a skier

Male, 25-44 years old and had some post-secondary education? Chances are you are a skier, at least according to the findings of a recent Simon Fraser University study.

SFU tourism expert Peter Williams surveyed skiers from across the province to determine their personal profile, travel patterns and attraction to ski packages.

He found 60 per cent of skiers were male and roughly the same figure were in the 25-44 years age bracket.

Nearly three quarters had some post-secondary education and 35 per cent had annual earnings of more than $100,000.

The survey also showed only eight per cent of B.C. skiers are in the 19-24 years and 54-65 age brackets.

The majority of those questioned considered themselves to be intermediate skiers, had never taken lessons and had been hitting the slopes for at least five years.

They spent an average 15 days skiing each year, five nights away from home on their ski trips and spent $164 a day on their pastime.

More than three quarters owned their own equipment and more than half used day ski passes.

And they are not likely to take advantage of a ski package offer: less than one in five used them.

This and other studies carried out by Williams in recent years have shown fewer new skiers have the same "loyalty to the slopes" as their older counterparts.

Those aging skiers are also taking to the slopes less than they used to.

Williams said the industry is reacting to those trends by widening the range of activities on the hill.

He pointed to snowboarding, child care facilities, better food and services and more off-season activities as examples.

A strong sixth game total (including handicap) of 636 backed by a strong finish powered Saunders-Alway to a 181 pin win victory.

The duo also put together the best four-game total of the night (2,042) on the way to picking up the $140 first place money.

(All prize money came from bowlers entry fees. They also paid their own lineage.)

Diane Francis and Norm Holmes hung on for second spot, edging out Lois and Pat Taylor by just five pins.

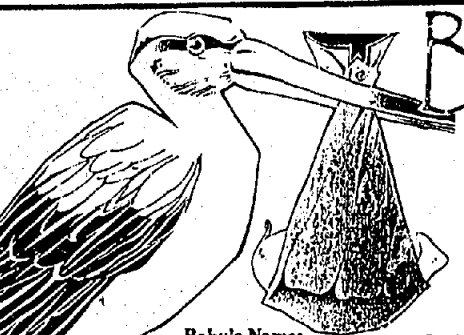

Leif Thomsen and Gabrielle Prevost took fourth spot while Diane and Dale Lufkin bowled to the fifth and final money spot.

Diane Francis had the highest single game count, storming to a 418 in her sixth game.

Debbie Middleton (348) and Daria Saunders (344) tallied the next highest scores among the total of 14 300-pin-plus games bowled on the night.

Local bowlers came through for fellow player Jean Burkett, lone survivor of December's tragic fire in Thornhill, by putting a total of $640.47 in the donation kettle set up at the lanes.
